Difficult roads... A premises update

from Phil Austin - Chair of the Mosaic Jewish Community

few months ago, it looked as though we had finally found our new shared Mosaic home. Members of the Property Working Group were quietly optimistic. The general sentiment was "we've been here before but this one looks promisina – verv promisina".

When, you might ask, will our tireless efforts be rewarded?

It has, after all, been several years since we started our premises search. Well. I can't of course give you a precise date for the completion of our search and the acquisition of our new home. However, I can assure you that we have taken steps to improve our chances of success, more specifically, to improve our competitive position when a suitable property comes onto the market.

For example - and as previously reported - we have engaged niche professional support to boost our market intelligence and market positioning. We have also submitted a pre-planning application to Harrow which will enable any prospective purchaser to see the undoubted potential of our Bessborough Road site as a precursor to negotiations with us that could lead to the identification of a suitable site or existing building for Mosaic.

We are also considering other options to enable us to move quickly when a site of interest becomes available - more on this to follow in my next update.

It remains the case that our task is challenging. Opportunities remain limited and we face stiff competition from schools and other faith groups. However, relocation is an essential Mosaic goal to help us sustain and hopefully grow our community.

The journey we are embarked upon is both arduous and frustrating, but the end will more than justify the means. I was reminded of this recently on my journey to work. Some kind soul at my station pens a piece of wisdom every morning to give the downtrodden commuter a lift. On the very morning I was pondering our recent premises disappointment I saw the daily message (pictured, above) and it resonates perfectly with where we are now as a community.

Mental Health Awareness Shabbat at Mosaic Reform

from Rabbi Kathleen Middleton

I twas the summer of 1991. I had just completed an intensive summer Ulpan course at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem, and I was considering spending the last two weeks in Israel, studying at an orthodox women's Yeshivah. One of my fellow students at the Ulpan recommended a particular yeshivah and suggested I ring the Rebbezin for an admissions interview. The rebbezin seemed quite friendly and invited me to one of her shiurim.

I really can't recall what the subject of the shiur was about, but I do remember that it convinced me not to study there!

The first thing I found objectionable about the shiur was the Rebbezin's proud announcement that her son had been arrested for throwing stones at chilonim (non-religious Israelis), who were driving on Shabbat! Although I was quite observant in those days, stone-throwing did not fit into my understanding of what being shomer Shabbat was all about. However, it disturbed me even more, that the Rebbetzin kept telling us repeatedly and quite emphatically, that we are always accountable for all our deeds. 'But what about someone who suffers from a mental illness?' I asked her. 'If people are compelled to do something because of mental health issues, they cannot be held accountable for their deeds, can they?' I remember her look of the deepest disapproval at my question. 'Everyone is always accountable for their deeds,' she said emphatically, 'and if they are not, then that is God's will'.

by the extreme disapproval of my question, and by her lack of compassion; it seemed that inadvertently, I had touched on a taboo I should not have mentioned. I realised that within the orthodox community, there was still much stigma and fear attached to acknowledging mental illness. Such stigma and fear are, of course, not exclusive to the orthodox community. In our society too, there has been a similar apprehension about the open discussion and disclosure of mental health problems.

However, much has changed in our attitudes to mental health care. In the past couple of years, greater prominence has been given to mental health awareness, helped enormously by the brave outspokenness of Princes William and Harry, who openly talked about their struggles of coping with the trauma of the sudden death of their mother, Princess Diana. That shift in attitude is a good thing, because mental health problems are far more common than we think. Statistics show that here in the UK, 1 in 4 adults experiences mental health problems at least once a year. Increasing pressures and limited support has created a crisis in the mental wellbeing of young people, with children and adolescent mental health services reporting a great increase in referrals for self-harm, in particular.

In March 2017, Reform Judaism decided to appoint a Mental Health Worker specifically focusing on the mental healthcare of our young people, to address this issue, and offer support and advice to our young people, their parents, teachers, youth workers and friends.

In order to increase awareness, and offer support and advice, Mosaic Reform has organized a special Mental Health Awareness Shabbat on Shabbat 3rd February, with a special sermon looking at Rabbinic sources. It will be followed by a panel discussion by professionals. All are welcome.

We have been created equally (not equal)

Sermon given at the member-led service on Shabbat Vayetse (November 25th) by David Martin

There is a well-known quote by the actor George Burns, regarding sermons. He said, "The secret of a good sermon is that it should have a good beginning and a good ending: and to have the two as close together as possible." I will try to stick to his view.

In our "new" gender-neutral

Siddur, references to 'man' have been replaced by 'people' and God is no longer referred to as 'He' but by such terms as 'the Almighty One'. This is fair enough in our modern inclusive society, but gender neutrality can be extended to such crazy things (in my humble opinion) as the signs on the toilet doors at the Traverse Theatre in Edinburgh, which state (and I quote)..."The Traverse Theatre aims to be a trans and non-binary inclusive space and as such we encourage patrons to please use the facilities that best fit their gender identity or expression." I was there in August and I'm still trying to work out that one.

Leaving aside gender neutrality, the modern consensus is that all people are created equal - but people are not created equal...they are created equally. What is the difference? Well, to say that we are all created equal, that is to say we are 'all the same', diminishes the diversity of human existence. We are not equal. Some of us are tall and some of us are short. Some of us have dark skin and some of us have light skin. Some of us are fat and some of us are thin. Some of us have lots of hair, and then there's me. We are most certainly not created equal. I never stood an equal chance of singing like Andrea Bocelli, and that's ok...it's a shame for you, but hey!

If we were all "equal" life would be boring, so we are created equally. We are all endowed by God with the right to human dignity and the right to pursue happiness. Every person has a bit of Godliness inside them, every person. It is a shared quality that all human beings possess as a part of our natural creation.

There will, of course, always be rivalry; people believing that they are better than others.

Two apples high up in a tree were looking down on the world. The first apple said, "If we were all "equal" life would be boring, so we are created equally. We are all endowed by God with the right to human dignity and the right to pursue happiness"

"Look at all those people fighting, robbing, rioting - no one seems willing to get along with his fellow man. Someday we apples will be the only ones left. Then we'll rule the world." Replied the second apple, "Which of us - the reds or the greens?"

Then, of course, there is racial prejudice versus racial tolerance. I'm reminded of an elderly relative who objected to having 'foreign' carers and when challenged on this, insisted (and again I quote) - "I'm not a racist, I JUST DON'T LIKE THEM".

Races are perceived as falling into stereotypical categories. In our ordinary use of language today, a stereotype according to the dictionary is "a standardised mental picture that is held in common by members of a group and that represents an oversimplified opinion, prejudiced attitude, or uncritical judgment."

For example, all English people are reserved and stiff upper-lipped, all Italians are suave and well-dressed, all Germans are efficient, the Dutch produce the very best Rabbis, all Australians are down to earth, all Eastern Europeans are very hard-working, all Africans have great rhythm, all Americans are somewhat brash, the Welsh are all good singers and, most people will concede, the Irish have a great sense of humour and fun and a wonderful 'turn of phrase'.

This particular stereotype was proven to me some twenty years ago when I accompanied Juliet to a meeting in Dublin. This was my very first trip to Ireland. It was an Aer Lingus flight and when my hot beverage was served, the stewardess must have put tea bags into a pot and then instead of filling it with boiling water, she'd filled it will boiling coffee so the resulting combination was... interestina.

I called her over and said, "This coffee is a mixture of tea and coffee." She said, "Did you try it?" I said, "Of course I tried it." She said, "Did you like it?" I said, "No, it was absolutely disgusting." She said, "Well, you'll know not to have it again then, won't

I thought to myself..."Yes! This is going to be a great trip!"

The trip of which I speak, was courtesy of a generous benefactor, who was funding medical research into a little known condition from which one of his sons had sadly died. Partners of the various delegates were also permitted to attend, as the 5 star hotel rooms had been paid for by said benefactor, so people such as myself only had to pay their own air fares.

The two days of meetings culminated in a dinner for about twenty of us, all paid for by our host, who had taken over a section of one of his favourite restaurants for the evening. After the meal I said to him, "Thank you ever so much for the wonderful meal. This is a great restaurant." He replied, "Yes,

COMMUNAL

"We have to allow people to be themselves and not pre-judge or have an unrealistic expectation of how they are going to be"

it's great here – you don't feel a bit hungry when you've finished!"

Many years ago, at the height of 'The Troubles" in Northern Ireland and the resulting IRA bombings in London, I had an Irish patient who told me that some neighbours had said to her to "Go back to Ireland. You're not wanted here." I said that her neighbours' abuse of her was good. She said, "What do you mean?" I said, "Well, at least while they're starting on you, they're leaving us Jews alone!"

One quick example of a perceived stereotype was my encounter with "White Van Man". Whilst I was filling my car with petrol at the Pinner Green petrol station, a man wearing a tee shirt which exposed his myriad tattoos and his ample stomach overhanging his scruffy trousers, finished filling his white van and went into the shop to pay. He came out a second or two before I was going in, and the door slammed in my face. I thought, "Typical! Thanks a lot, mate." A second later he turned, came back and held the door open for me saying, "Terribly sorry, mate. I was miles away!"

So, our stereotypical perception of others can be justified but only to an extent. I've met some tone deaf Welsh people, some shy Americans, some brash and noisy English people, and a few downright miserable Irish, so really we have to allow people to be themselves and not pre-judge or have an unrealistic expectation of how they are going to be.

I'll leave you with this...

If you can live without caffeine, If you can be cheerful, ignoring aches and pains,

If you can resist complaining,

If you can understand when your loved ones are too busy to give you any time,

If you can take criticism and blame without resentment.

If you can ignore a friend's limited education and never correct him or her,

If you can resist treating a rich friend better than a poor friend,

If you can face the world without lies and deceit.

If you can conquer tension without medical help,

If you can relax without alcohol,
If you can sleep without the aid of drugs,
If you can honestly say that deep in your heart you have no prejudice against creed, colour, religion, gender preference, or politics.

- Then you have almost reached the same level of spiritual development as your dog!

Friendship Club 40th Anniversary from Trudy Segal

75 people were present to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the Friendship Club on 13th November. It is a great testimony to the warmth and welcoming atmosphere that the Club is thriving where so many others in the area have closed. Tributes were paid to the hard-working committee and helpers who ensure all members enjoy their weekly visit. Also remembered were the founding members of the Club, whose aim was to provide companionship for those who otherwise might be on their own. Both Rabbi Kathleen and Mosaic Reform chairman.

Lawrence Chadwick gave birthday wishes and congratulations on this special occasion. Thanks were also given to Ann and Gay in the office as well as Prakash, our caretaker for their continued help and support.

Everyone enjoyed a special lunch and the hall was decorated with balloons and flowers as befits such a memorable anniversary.

The club meets every Monday and offers mobility exercises, three-course lunch and entertainment and new members are especially welcome. [See January program on p11]

Holocaust Memorial Day

Mosaic Holocaust Memorial Day at Bessborough Road

We will be holding our second Holocaust Memorial Day education event at Mosaic on Wednesday, 30th January with local secondary students attending workshops and listening to a guest Holocaust Survivor speaker.

We are part of the Northwood Holocaust Memorial Day Education (NHMDE) programme, where over 3000 students attend various synagogues over two weeks to be informed on how the rise of anti-semitism brought about the death of six million.

We are extremely proud to be establishing ourselves with local schools and rely on our volunteers to make these facilitated workshop sessions both informative and valuable to the next generation.

FILM MOSAIC

DENIAL

At 8:00pm on Tuesday 23rd January 2018

Based on the acclaimed book 'History on Trial: My Day in Court with a Holocaust Denier', DENIAL recounts Deborah Lipstadt's (Academy Award winner Rachel Weisz) legal battle for historical truth against David Irving (Cannes Award winner Timothy Spall), who accused her of libel when she declared him a Holocaust denier. In an action for Defamation, the English legal system, places the burden of proof is on the accused, therefore it was for Lipstadt and her legal team to prove the essential truth that the Holocaust occurred. Directed by Emmy Award winner Mick Jackson.

Released in 2017 to great popular acclaim – this riveting film is not to be missed.

Knit, Natter, Nosh

from Barbara Altman

I belong to a small local very friendly Jewish knitting group, started up about six years ago.

We knit squares that are sewn together to make blankets, baby clothes, hats and scarves and these items are sent to Former Soviet Union countries and Israel for the children and elderly who need warm winter items to help them survive the bitterly cold winters they endure. We knit in member's homes every week, on alternative Tuesdays and Thursdays, some mornings and some afternoons (depending on parking restrictions).

Also, if anyone has any wool they would like to donate it would be very gratefully received.

Mosaic Quiz Night

from Martin Simonis

he main Mosaic fund-raiser of the year took place on 26th November – a Quiz Night compered by the ever-popular 'Quiz, Quiz, Quiz'. It was a sell-out and a huge success – a testament to the efforts of the Community Group. 18 tables and 165 participants competed – the picture, above, gives a good flavour. Over £2,000 was raised, and this will go towards synagogue charities – funding community and religious events.

The food (fish goujons, roast new potatoes, salads, lokshen pudding, plus all the extras) was organised by the Mosaic Community Group, who did all the cooking (except for the fish). A massive exercise which, as ever, ran seamlessly.

The questions were thoughtful and challenging – the table I was on correctly (and amazingly, to me) identified 'Twist and Shout' played backwards, recognised the football emblem of Juventus and the Garfield character Odie, but failed to remember what the Queen holds in her hand in a pack of playing cards.

A confusing conclusion somewhat obscured the fact that two teams tied for first place. Doubtless, the evening, the Quiz, the food and the company were enjoyed by everyone, whether they were on the winning table(s) or not. And a lot of money was raised for our 'good causes'. Here's to the next one...

Launch of Humphrey Phillips' new book

Humphrey signing his book for Gay Saunders uesday 5th December marked the launch of a fascinating new book of RAF wartime experiences by none other than our very own Humphrey Phillips. The book is entitled 'A Thousand and One', a reference to the bomber raids against Cologne and Essen.

The launch was marked with a party at Erskine Hall, where Humphrey is living. Humphrey was a real star, made a speech, signed books and very kindly donated a copy of his book to the Shul.

Flight Lieutenant Humphrey Phillips DFC, MiD (twice) had an exciting war. Originally trained as a flight mechanic, he became one of the very first of the new breed of flight engineers. Posted initially to 103 Squadron, he was allocated immediately to the Conversion Flight, helping to convert new crews from two engines to four. While 'instructing', he was flight engineer to many of the famous names of the time and flew in the first two of the historic, showpiece 1000 bomber raids, as part of a scratch crew of tour-expired instructors.

Humphrey survived a number of scrapes with novice pilots and was Mentioned in Despatches for inventing two devices to instruct new engineers on the Lancaster's fuel and hydraulics systems.

Keen to operate, he was eventually handpicked to join for a tour with 626 Squadron, at the height of the Battle of Berlin. Humphrey survived his tour, was awarded the DFC, and returned to instructing, being once more Mentioned in Despatches with 1668 HCU before the war's end.

Children's novel republished after author takes his own life

hildren's author Jonny Zucker, 49, took his own life in November 2016 after living with depression for over two decades. 2Simple are republishing his most popular novel 'Striker Boy' (first published 2010) with all the proceeds going directly to the bereaved family and the mental health charity, Mind.

The book launched on 5th October 2017. It is available from amazon.co.uk for £6.99 and £1.40 from every copy sold will be donated to Mind, a registered charity in England and Wales (no. 219830). The family have chosen Mind as Jonny received support from them over the years.

Jonny dedicated his life to getting kids reading, working for many years as a primary school teacher before becoming a children's author. He is survived by his loving wife Fiona Starr, who is a psychologist, and their three young sons.

"Jonny was my best friend and soul mate. Even towards the end, when his flame was burning out, we managed to salvage deep moments of love and humour. The Striker Boy campaign gives me hope and comfort that his death wasn't in vain, that even in death Jonny can still inspire thousands of children all over the world through his words," says Fiona.

One in four people will live with a mental health problem every year and it is the largest killer of men under 50.

Beyond funds, the Striker Boy campaign is raising awareness of mental health issues in adults and children. 2Simple have designed a range of free teacher resource packs for schools, including an 'emotional resilience resource' to help primary school teachers promote positive mental health.

Paul Farmer, Mind's Chief Executive, said: "We're delighted to have been chosen as the charity partner for Striker Boy by the Zucker family. Their support will mean that Mind can continue providing vital services, like our Infoline, so people can make their own choices and access the treatment and support that is right for them. This partnership will help us to make sure no one has to face a mental health problem alone."

Fiona's cousin, radio and television presenter Jonny Gould received the news of his cousin-in-law's death whilst live on air. He feels strongly that this is a story the world needs to hear, "Mental health needs to be discussed in the open and these personal stories need to be shared. The media has such a vital role in helping people understand mental health and putting pressure on the government to act."

Jonny Zucker was a member of NNLS (New North London (Masorti) Synagogue.
